

NEW SKELETON SEA WEBSITE

Munich, 19 May 2011 – The launch of the fully revamped website www.skeletonsea.com underscores the commitment of the group of artists to their core message: "Keep the oceans clean." In addition to a comprehensive art gallery featuring works by Luis de Dios, Xandi Kreuzeder and João Parrinha and a new section with images and videos (Stills & Motion), the new website also offers an array of additional features. The new Skeleton Sea blog provides information on all current exhibitions and projects. The artists also allow activists they have befriended to express their views here as well as provide news on their own activities.

The integration of the Skeleton Sea Facebook page into the new website enhances interactivity, with all updates and actions by the artists group also disseminated via this channel. This means that anyone wishing to remain in the loop can also connect with Skeleton Sea via Facebook, ensuring that they don't miss out on any initiative.

With immediate effect all visitors to the new Skeleton Sea website can also post comments on the different contributions or publish articles directly on their Facebook profile via the "Like" button.

For further information, images and videos on Skeleton Sea visit www.skeletonsea.com.

ABOUT SKELETON SEA

The Skeleton Artist Group is composed of Luis de Dios, Xandi Kreuzeder and João Parrinha. Over the years, these three friends have worked both individually and collectively in an effort to raise environmental awareness through the medium of green art, and from the perspective of those that rely on Mother Nature to feed their passion for sport.

Working exclusively with flotsam and jetsam, and any other beach trash they encounter on their travels, the artists create works for Skeleton Sea that express a strong message based around their shared cause of "keeping the oceans clean!"
